

Before thou wed, or wouldst intend, } First weigh him least she prove to light thy wife should love thee, to the end, } and so connute thee out of sight:
 Are to be sold, by Hugh Perre, at y^e signe of y^e Harrow, in Brittaines Burse: 1628

My dotard Husband, giues not mee And therefor since I shuch things lack, those halfe of dues, w^h needfull be. Thus horne I him behind his back.

Fyer, Ayre, Earth, Water, represents; By which thou maist receiue thy fill, to thee their sundry Elements, & that powerfull can preserve & kill:
London printed and sold by P. Stent

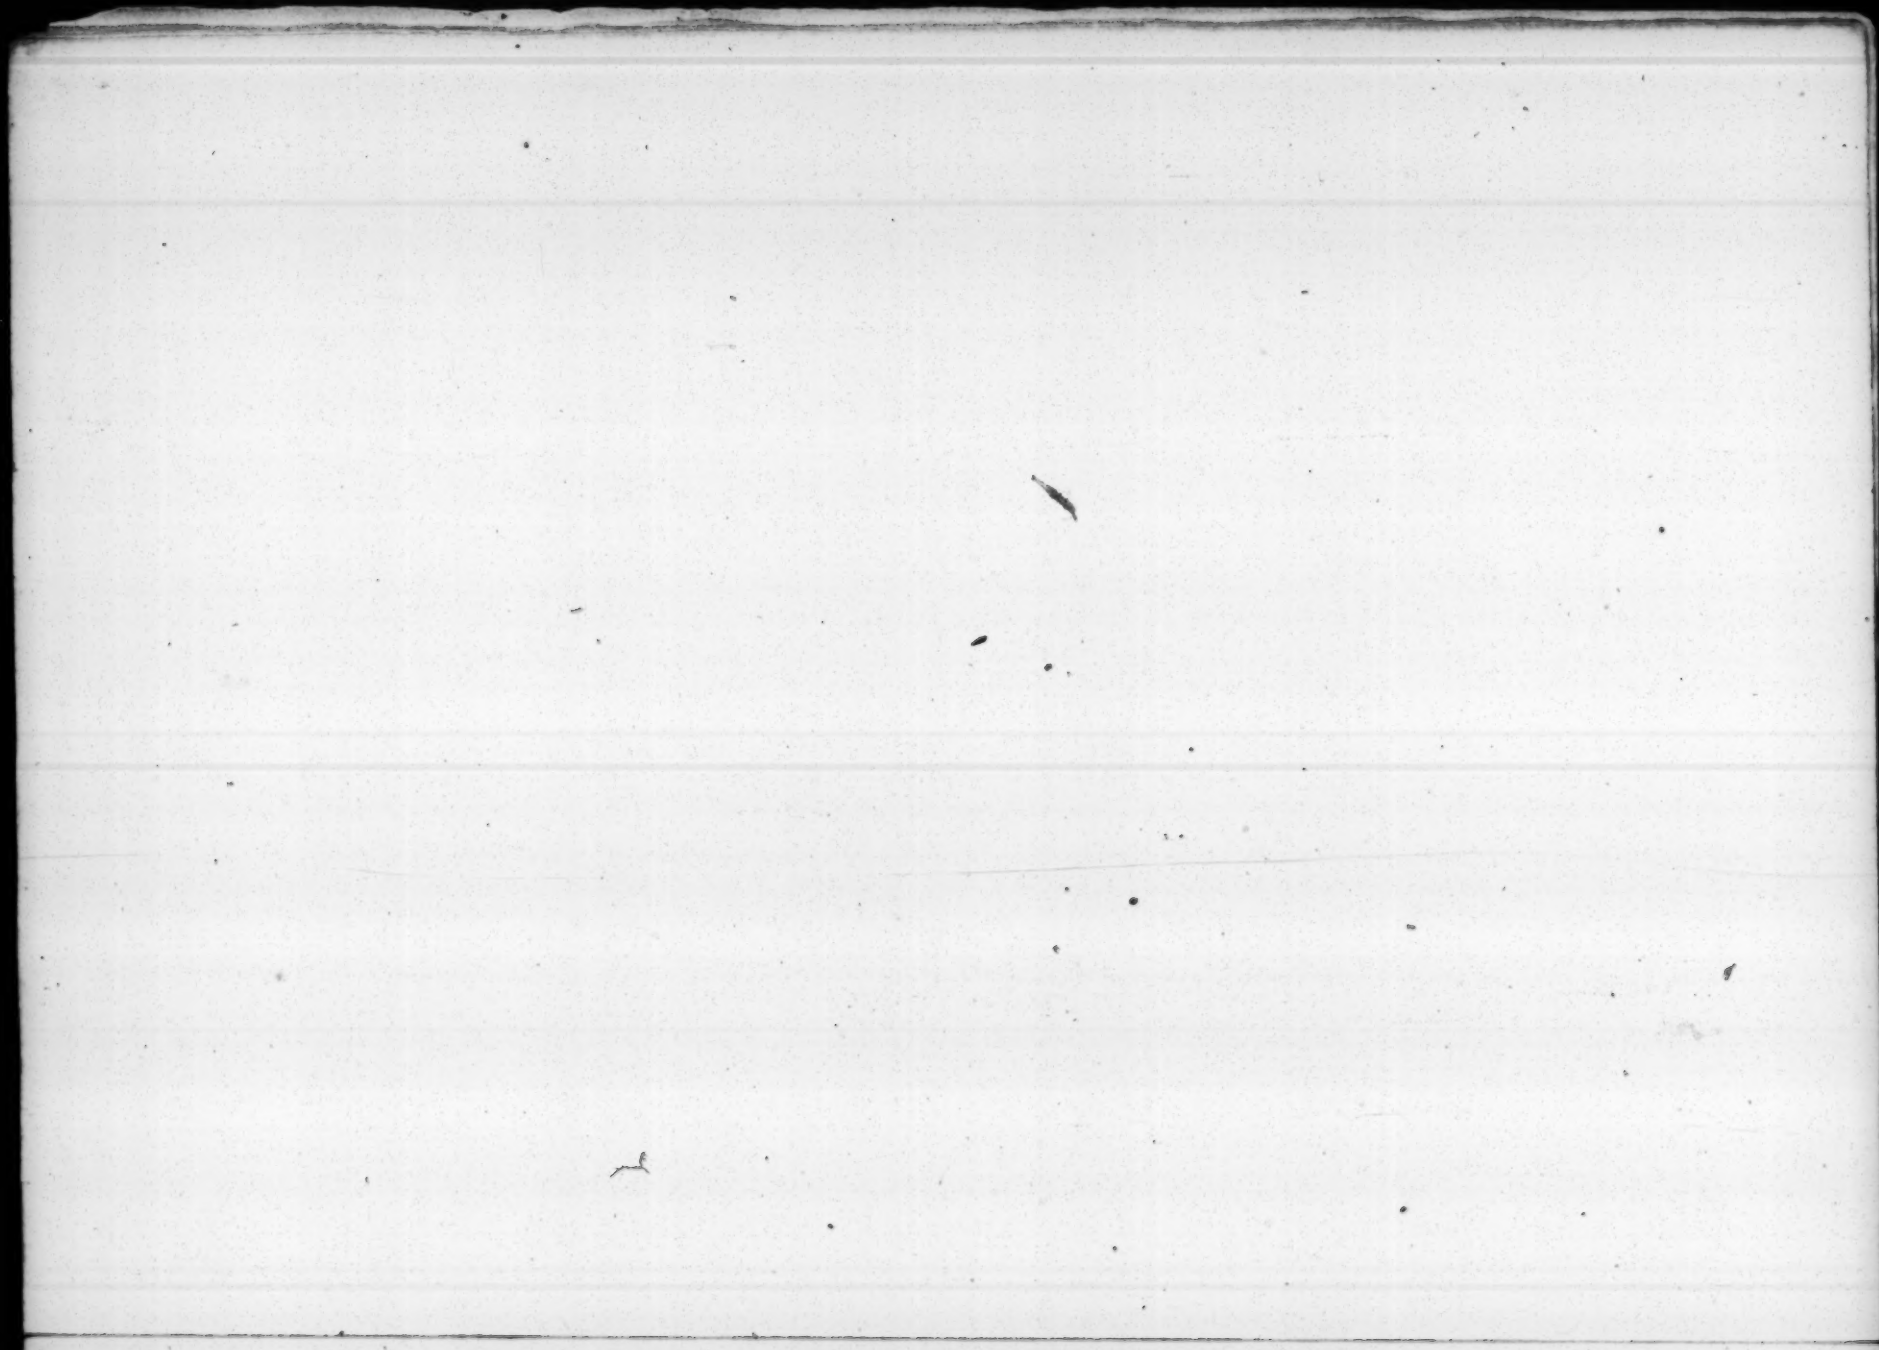

1. In the first scene, the man and woman are standing near a body of water, looking towards the city in the distance. The man is holding a long staff or pole.

2. In the second scene, the two men are seated at a table, engaged in conversation. One man is pointing towards the left, while the other is looking at him.

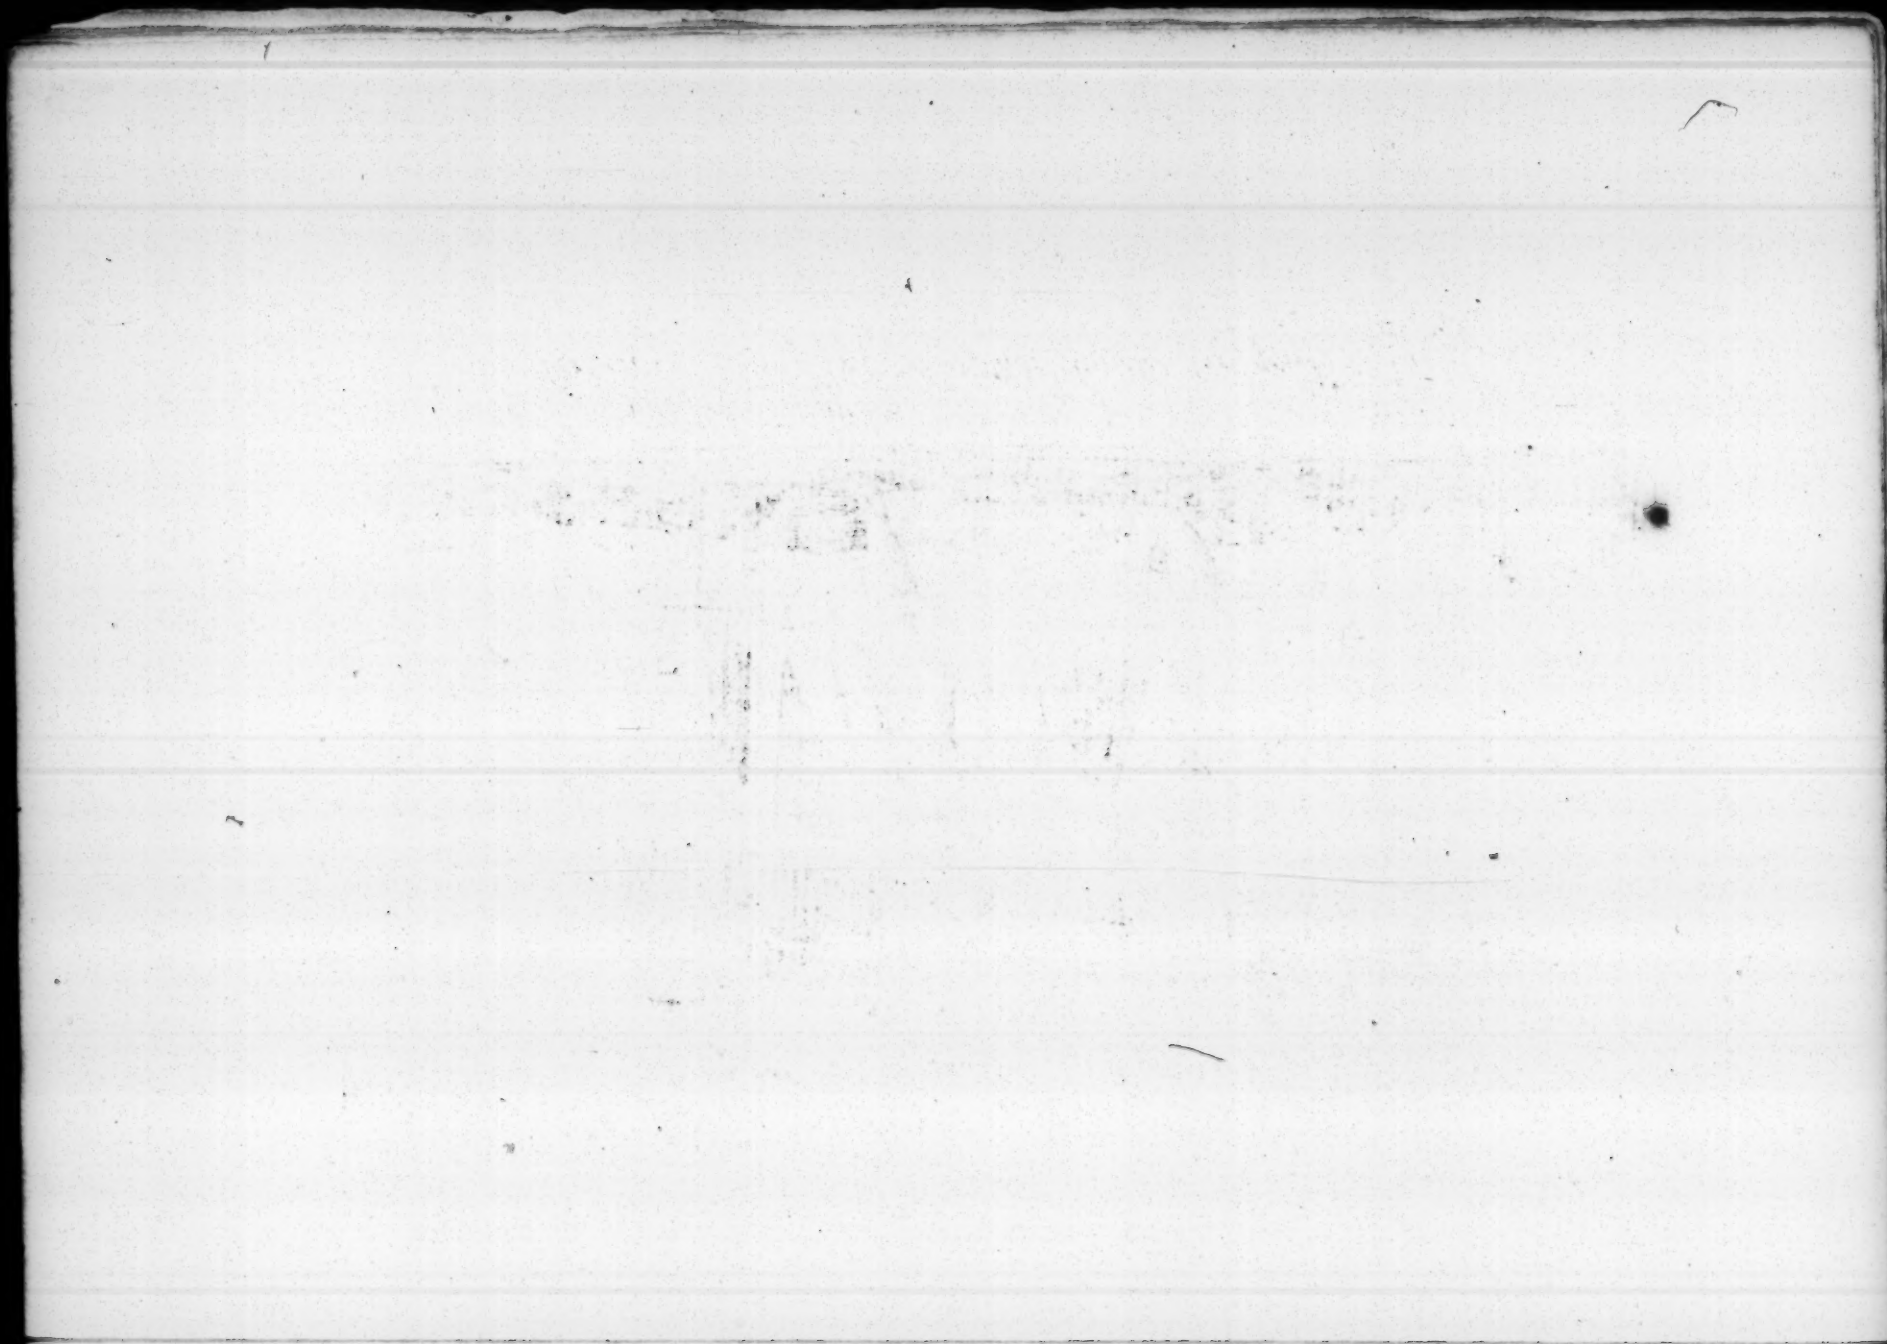

*you S^r that haue me so begiulde, & O pre'thee Wench, lett mee alone,
I pray receiue yo^r Bastard Childs for I protest, all's spent and gone:*

Here take my hand, but not my hart, But hould you dotting fooles all three, w^{ch} I to neither, deigne impart, ~ That thincke for gould to lye 10th mee,

These hornes, y^e see, w^h here I beare, For why the difference, thus apperes, are not like those, w^h Cuckolds beare. These playne are seene, so are not theirs.

Well worth to scourge, so weake A patch, And cause the Boyes there at make games, who wth so strong, A whore would match, by ryding thus, to both their shames:

Their Globes of worlds, & worldly things, Nought can I for their non of these, wth no delight, nor pleasure brings, So like this bonny lassie me please:

Handwritten text, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the page. The text is faint and mostly illegible due to fading and the quality of the scan.

Let young wth young, & Old wth old, } Thers not an old man can Content, their matches make, not love for gould. } A wench thats young, but shee'l repent.

The world is turned, upside downe ~ As by their wheelen to gaine least riches;
When wives so on, their Husbonds frowne ~ Shall forst give leaue, to weare y breeches:
